COURSE OR QUIP PART II

Selah Griffin,
Taking ENGL225

Last fall I created a little game where I picked some of the most liberal-arts-coded classes of the semester and made a few of my own and left it up to you to decide which ones have a legitimate chance of ending up on your schedule next year. And now, I'm doing it again.

Thinking Thoughts and Feeling Feelings

PSYCH240

This introductory seminar details the ways in which natural cognitive reactions are often disregarded as irrational and overreactions. Through the course, students will examine the history of mental diagnostics and the development of social perspectives on mental health.

Literary Contributions of Fanfiction

ENGL225

“Fanfiction,” or the amateur fiction writing by fans based on original material and real-life idols, has been gaining not only endorsement from the writing community but adapted into their own full feature films and publishes series. In this course, we will recognize the ways in which this genre is succeeding in the production of a new generation of writers and readers.

Puppets: Performing Objects

DS251

This course will explore puppetry as a theatre form with deep roots in many cultural traditions, and as a prompt for the design and creation of visual objects that, when animated by a human actor, come to life. Through the course, students will make several different types of puppets and will become familiar with the ways a puppeteer creates the illusion of the puppet as a “living” being

What’s the Big Idea?

PHIL205

Why are we here? Where did we come from? Is there life after death? In this course, we will consider the fundamental questions dominating our existence and the way we, as humans, approach these existential dilemmas.

March 24th. The year? Two thousand and twenty-three. The week? Last week. Campus changed forever, when Trucha, a new bubble tea place opened its doors at The Nest. I didn't try it, but I have a complaint. You see, I spent a year of my life slinging boba. That's what the boba-biz calls being a barista. This factoid about my previous employment has come up more than once in my stilted small talk, specifically with my roommate. Together, in early Fall 2022 the two of us realized there's a gap in the granville market for bubble tea. Now picture this, my roommate tells two people, those two people blab to four people, and those four people talk to eight more, and so on... Eventually this idea will get to someone with ambition!

Now, I'm not saying the concept of bubble tea in Granville was stolen from the wise minds of me and my roommate, BUT I am saying we were at least thinking about it far before Trucha opened their doors at the Nest. So what do we make of this? Well that's why I've called you all in here to read this article. I'm demanding, nay rather asking, for our hard earned cut. 2% of all net profits is all I request. One percent for me and one for the ol' roommate. Trucha will hardly notice 2% missing. 2%? That's barely a good milk.

If I do not receive this payment within the week, I will understand why. However, I spent a long, mildly difficult year slinging the boba, and I didn't even get a job offer from Trucha to be their trusted bo-barista! (That pun may work better read aloud). Listen, I can mix up milk tea, fix up fruit tea, shake up smoothies, bake boba, and pop pearls, yet Trucha didn't track me down for the position?! I'm an absolute asset to the Trucha team! I may be bad with customers, hate cleaning up anything sticky or wet, and have a schedule that absolutely won't work with Fridays 3-6, but I think we can all agree I at least deserved the offer, the whole business was my idea after all.

So just to be clear, Trucha, you owe me 2% of your net profits and/or a job at your fine establishment open Fridays 3-6 at the Nest. If neither of my demands are met, well then I suggest you start lawyering up because I've got friends in the debate team. Well I don't actually, but I could make a friend from the debate team, and trust me, they'd be a hell of a lawyer. You've been warned.

I will be eagerly awaiting your response. XOXOXO.

I'M IN A COMA!

Brin Glass,
Victim of America

TikTok has a famed trend about little Victorian children going into heart failure when they see how crazyyyyyyy our society is today and it got me thinking... maybe I had culture shock when first coming to Denison. Think about this: my high school was 4,000 students (~1,000 per grade) and had a split campus 15 minutes apart, so coming to Denison was strange. Even though it was what I wanted for a school. (not it being in Ohio though)

Okay okay, I didn't actually receive culture shock from Granville, Ohio, but I promise, this place is wayyyyyyy different than where I'm from. I lived my tween-teen years in Wildwood, IL. A small, unincorporated neighborhood next to Gurnee, IL (home of Six Flags Great America). My neighborhood was a cluster of mismatched houses on the outskirts of a smedium (small-medium) lake. However, Gurnee was classic cookie-cutter suburbia life (awesome!!) and a cluster of EVERY fast food restaurant EVER imaginable. So, if I made the famed Tiktok trend about Victoria(paris)n kids having a hard time controlling their heart rate, here's how it would go:

- The fact Granville's only fast food restaurant is a humble Subway tucked away from public eyes, and always out of lettuce. Gurnee had Jersey Mikes, Jimmy Johns, Subway, and Penn Station in the same lot!
- Granville's traffic lights switch to blinking red/yellow (basically turning into a stop sign) at 7 PM. Gurnee has a redlight camera at every intersection.
- Small businesses exist in Granville and thrive (kind of). The best small business in Gurnee was Subway because it was family-owned.
- Gurnee doesn't have an official downtown area at all. Our town hall is the Target between Marianos and Party City, across the street from Walmart and rightttttt by Jewel Osco.
- The fact Jewel Osco is only in Illinois.
- Last year Gurnee got a Crumbl and Raising Canes. WE WILL NEVER BE BEHIND ON THE TRENDS. I really feel like Granvillians don't know what they are yet.
- Granville has 4 churches kitty-corner from one another and Gurnee has two McDonald's kitty-corner from each other.

Basically... Granville is whack!
