DRINKING STRENGTHS

Mr. Beer,
Senior Editor

When you go out on the weekends what is your drinking strength? What makes you different from the other party-goers? Listed below are a few different strengths that you might have when drinking beer.

The Manager

This is the person that can get hammered and party all night long. But, when shit starts to hit the fan, they are the person that is able to keep things under control. Does someone need a walk home? Does someone need to talk to campus security? Is someone throwing up and there is no one to take care of them? The manager can handle all of these scenarios completely black out drunk. God bless the managers. You all really carry the team.

The Long Distance Drinker

This is the person that goes for longevity. This person is usually gifted with the term “Ferda”. They are able to stay out and about into the late hours of the night. Everyone else passes out and goes to bed, but the long distance drinker is ready for the next move. They are usually not the drunkest person at the party, but they are able to stay active for an abnormal amount of time. They will be asking you: “what’s the move?” at 4:30 am. The move is bedtime.

Bottomless Pit

This is somewhat self explanatory. This is the person that is able to delete alcohol like it is water. It barely wears on them. They can be twelve beers deep and finish their math homework. It isn’t that their tolerance has been built up for years and years, they just have a supernatural ability to hold alcohol.

The Shot Gunner

This person can just shotgun like a beast. End of story.

The Comedian

Once this person gets two drinks in them, they become the funniest human being to ever live. They can be the least funniest person you’ve ever met, but when drunk, they are the best stand-up comic to walk the earth. They will make you cry laughing on Saturday night, and will stay up until 5:00 am doing an essay on Sunday night.

The Life of the Party

This person is the center of attention, but not by choice. They get drunk and create fun for the whole party. They get everyone dancing and talking. Cheers to these people.

The Super-Human

This is the person who has all of these strengths. Let me know if you find a person like this.
