Predicting Holy Monday (MET Gala 2023)

Griffin Conley,
Sophomore Writer

---

With Holy Monday on the horizon for May, I thought it would be fun to get a jump-start on the fashion reporting for the Bullsheet. With the theme of Karl Lagerfeld: A Line of Beauty, I think it would be fun to try to predict some red carpet trends.

First and foremost, any celebrity that chooses to play it safe will be seen in tweed. Thanks to Lagerfeld bringing a defibrillator to the brand in the 1980s, Chanel's tweed lineage, descending from Miss Coco herself, was cemented. Whether it is vintage Chanel outfits, like Olivia Rodrigo's infamous pink White House suit or another house doing their take on tweed, expect to see your favorite A-listers looking like they're fresh from the pages of Ivy Style: Radical Conformists.

Another Chanel inspired look might be something alpiny. While his last collection for Chanel before his passing was meant for Grenoble or some other French slope, celebrities might be busting out the performance wear. While down jackets and merino wool might not be ideal for the first Monday of May, it may be the most appropriate to his legacy.

Controversially, I hope to see fur (Sorry, Abby and Micah). Karl Lagerfeld brought back fur with Fendi, and I think it should not be ignored. Whether it is opera-esque fur stole or some tame fur accessory (think wrap or clutch), it should be done. If a bold designer is feeling confident, we could see a ball down of mixed materials including fur.

If you thought I would write this and not talk about sweatpants gate, you are mistaken. If we are lucky, a designer may be tongue in cheek and do garments done in Terry cloth. If this occurs it is more than likely to be seen on a man taking a departure from the black tuxedo, but still not committing to a MET Gala theme.

Speaking of tuxedos. I would not be surprised if we witness men trying to wear black tuxedos with even blacker acetate sunglasses. How can we fault them for failing to dress up, if their outfit IS Karl????!!!!

MET GALA DRINKING GAME

Griffin Conley,
Sophomore Writer

Take a shot:

- For every Chanel minaudiere
- If a celebrity not “endorse” Karl Lagerfeld or brings up his “unsavory” history
- If someone informs us their outfit is vintage.
- If someone looks high and mighty for wearing vintage Patou or Chloé instead of Chanel or Fendi
- For every story reminding us that either they truly knew “Karl” or their fun times together
- Everytime you see black sunglasses
- For every Famous Parent + Famous Kid(s)

Finish your drink:

- If a celebrity says Karl Lagerfeld was from a “different time”
- If a celebrity gets mistaken and thinks the Gala theme is Coco Chanel
- If someone other than Jamie Lee Curtis tries to make a point about Nepotism
- If Kim Kardashian ruins another dress
- Someone asks “who’s Karl?”

Mick’s Final Remarks

Mick,
Works for the Bullsheet

This is my final Bullsheet of the semester. I have some advice:

- Study for your finals
- Love your friends
- Love your family
- Make sure to take out the trash
- Brush your teeth
- Go to Doobie Palooza
- Give out declining if you have extra
- Keep reading the Bullsheet
- Give me 5 bucks
- Bring back high fives
- Go to the Cidery
- Have fun
- Take a shower
- Do your homework
- Get some sleep
- Make sure to set your alarm
