Vol. XLV, No. 106

PICK ME!

Selah Griffin,

Open to work

According to The Bullsheet's official LinkedIn profile, we have been working full time as Arby's Clout Director in Flemish Region, Belgium since 2010. LinkedIn, it seems, thinks we're ready for a change of pace. In the hopes of "switching this up," we have decided to respond to the emails advertising the position of Shift Manager at the Arby location in Sayre, PA. Below is our official cover letter and resume. Carpe diem! Fingers crossed!

Arby's
Sayre, PA

Dear Arby's,

I am writing to express my interest in the Shift Manager position at Arby's. With my experience in team management, healthy dialogue, and conflict resolution, I am confident that I can contribute to Arby's commitment to delivering excellent food and service to its customers.

First and foremost, I want to communicate my sincere love of meats. All meats. All textures, flavors, shapes, sizes – each bring their own unique experience to the table.

Salami is a particular favorite of mine. The idea of air-dried meat might deter other meat eaters, but not me. I hear air-dried and think, "Delicious! What will they think of next?" I like salami because it packs a punch. It's smokey, it's salty, it's spicy. A little like me, and exactly what you can expect I'll bring to the Shift Manager role. Pairs well with cheese.

A close second to salami in my meat-list is turkey. Now, I know what you're thinking. It's dry, it's bland, it's boring – the complete opposite of salami. Why not just eat ham? But you don't know turkey like I do. Turkey is in the eye of the beholder. Think of the thigh, of the leg. Dark, juicy, flavorful meat. Think of the breast. Lean and mildavored until you slather it in honey and let it slow roast. That'll give you something to be thankful for.

Now, listen. Roast beef. It's lost its place in contemporary culture. I hear roast beef, and first I giggle, and then I think all American, I think crockpot, and I think flannel. What I respect about the Arby's mission is that it has made roast beef relevant again. And atop roast beef, Arby's has built an empire. They slap half a pound of that shit between two buns and call it a day. That, to me, is revolutionary.

I don't want to talk about chicken.

I am excited about the opportunity to join the Arby's team and contribute to the continued success of the restaurant. Thank you for considering my application. I look forward to the possibility of discussing my qualifications in more detail.

Unconditionally yours,
The Bullsheet
